Course Description
This seminar is a one-time requirement for the AOS Ph.D. degree devoted to advanced study of chosen topics in Atmospheric and Oceanic Sciences. The goal is to trace the coherence and continuity of thought on these topics and work on becoming a full-time Ph.D. dissertator and writer. The interplay of observations, theories, and the resolution of controversies will be analyzed in their influence on the evolution of each topic. Course activity consists primarily of weekly student background reading, individual presentations, and extensive group discussions. Readings will be posted on learn@uw or handed out in class.
